Poland in the Rockies is an 11-day international educational program bringing together university students, young professionals and distinguished speakers from Canada, the United States, Great Britain and Poland for an immersion in identity, community, and the history that formed us.

Set in the beautiful Rocky Mountain town of Canmore, Alberta from July 21-31, 2010, Poland in the Rockies is an intensive, intellectually stimulating program covering history and culture, discussing contemporary issues and the Polish heritage, making new friends, and strengthening our local communities while creating links with the world-wide Polish community.

Formal lectures, films, and discussions, together with opportunities for one-on-one conversations with speakers during communal meals, hikes, sightseeing, and campfires create a unique learning experience.

The participants range from recent immigrants to 4th generation descendents of immigrants; ethnically Polish or part Polish or not Polish at all; fluent in Polish, having limited Polish or speaking no Polish at all. But whatever their background, they are drawn together in a discovery of a rich cultural heritage: literature and art both classical and avant-garde, a democratic tradition based on freedom and respect for the individual, and a history of multi-cultural harmony. They are drawn together by the common experience of immigration and the political, social and economic crises that brought their forbears to America. Knowledge breaks down barriers among them while also creating a deeper understanding of their country of origin.

Our objective is to stimulate an interest among English-speaking Canadians and Americans in the Polish narrative; to create a network of well-informed and dynamic friends of Poland; and to encourage them to participate actively in Canadian and American affairs while integrating their identity and heritage into the mainstream.

Organized on a not-for-profit basis, by the Polish Canadian Association of Calgary in partnership with the Canadian Foundation for Polish Studies in Montreal, Poland in the Rockies has the support of many Polonia organizations, professional groups, businesses and individual Canadians and Americans. Their financial contributions, as Sponsors or as Friends of Poland in the Rockies, are a reflection of their belief that a symposium of such high standards is much needed.

Successful applicants receive a full scholarship that includes tuition, accommodation (11 nights), three meals per day, transportation costs in Alberta, and group excursions. It does not include the cost of return airfare to Calgary. Application information is available on our website.

Class with Professor Norman Davies

Information about how to apply, and how to make tax-exempt contributions to support Poland in the Rockies, is available on www.polandintherockies.com.

Since 2004, PitR alumni have been instrumental in creating an online magazine, www.cosmopolitanreview.com, a cross-country Polish Canadian youth leadership conference, Quo Vadis, (to be joined in 2010 by participants from the United States, see www.quovadisconference.com) and are a strong presence in many other networking initiatives.

Comments from participants in Poland in the Rockies

Poland in the Rockies hit on exactly the right formula... In my opinion, Poland in the Rockies is the best Polonia summer school that I have seen (and I have seen many). Norman Davies, PitR speaker in 2004 and 2008.

If a program like this had been offered at the time when I was a student, I'm sure I would have jumped at the opportunity. Andrew Nagorski, Director of Public Policy, East West Institute, New York, former editor Newsweek International, PitR speaker in 2006.

Stimulating days, sleepless nights, Newsweek's senior editor, a Globe and Mail journalist, history, literature, politics, art scholars and 33 students: The seminar was not only an intellectual journey, but an opportunity to accept my dual identity by discovering people who share similar experiences and interests. Kinia Adamczyk, Concordia University, Montreal; College of Europe, Warsaw, Editor-in-Chief, The Cosmopolitan Review, PitR 2006 and 2008

Thanks to you and your outstanding dedication to the Polish youth in North America, you have ignited a spark in each and every one of the PitR students to do the same. Kamil Mroz, University of Ottawa, founder of Quo Vadis Polish Canadian Youth Leadership Conference and Quo Vadis II, May 7-9, 2010 in Windsor, Ontario, PitR 2006

The program is important because it cultivates a younger and more aware generation of Poles and Polish enthusiasts, teaching them how to pursue their interests and make an impact. Kasia Dryja, U of Chicago, Stanford Law, PitR 2008

Many universities do not offer such programs so it is imperative that Poland in the Rockies continues... Vincent Chesney, Psychological Service Associate, Pennsylvania, PitR 2008

What a privilege it was to have attended Poland in the Rockies. The last weeks have really been among the most important in my life... being immersed in all things Polish. Eric Bednarski, National Film Board of Canada, Director, The Strangest Dream, PitR 2006 and 2008

I must thank you again for all that PitR did for me – the program did a wonderful job of getting me in touch with my Polishness and really inspired me to act in my community, and, of course, pursue research in Poland. Katherine Cioch, Loyola University, Chicago, Fullbright Scholar in Poland, PitR 2008

The program is truly one-of-a-kind. It opened my eyes to several pertinent issues concerning Polish-American and Polish-Canadian communities... The participants themselves were top-notch. Jonathan Sidor, U of Florida, PitR 2008.

[The program] allowed me to bridge the two cultural sides that I exist in... Further, it allows participants to interact with important scholars, journalists, film makers, and other speakers and creates a comfortable space within which students can build important networks. Joanna Kordus, University of British Columbia, Vancouver PitR 2008

The programme is invaluable for the way it... develops networks of young, informed leaders who are uniquely positioned to improve Polish foreign relations, whether on the ground in Poland itself, or abroad... The participants and speakers were top-notch, and I would go on the programme again in a heartbeat. Judith Browne, South Africa and New York, Editor, The Cosmopolitan Review, PitR 2008

It is an incredible venue for creating an international network of Polonia... I hope to bring some of the issues raised in the conference into my contemporary life, and share the information with fellow students and associates. Marta Rzechowka, University of Alberta, Edmonton, Alberta, PitR 2008

Honestly, this was the best experience I've had in my entire university career. It really meant a lot to me. Jakub Sawicki, Queen's University Medical School, Kingston, Ontario, PitR 2006

PitR brings together everything that is important for young Polonia. History, politics, art, literature, mixed with great people, picturesque views, hikes and amazing professors, shaken, not stirred. Mateusz Ezlakowski, Loyola University, Chicago, PitR 2008

I've been to many conferences; this is the first that will stay with me forever. Stan Oziewicz, Globe & Mail, PitR speaker in 2006
